

You have to baby proof your home. After plastic bags were introduced in the 1950s, many human children died this way. It still happens. Many Corgis have almost died this way; and via the MyCorgi.com, and many other supported Corgi sites, we have heard many more close encounters and even deaths....

Plastic bags are loaded guns. It's a major concept, hard to acquire, and you must always watch visitors, who don't know food bags are killers. Even after my experiences and posts, I have found intact dog food bags on my basement floor (handy bags, I kept them for some reason, or they were in the recycling...).

You have to train EVERYBODY. Cut holes in food bags. Food waste goes in only ONE place, and that's locked-up. We have a scissors hanging on cup hooks by the sink.

Venetian blinds also kill dogs, and children. Talk about this to every dog owner you meet. You'll never know how many you save. Corgis love to eat, and many are big "gulpers". Don't loose your Corgi to a choking accident, by feeing something too big, and or too much of.
