

Corgi Safety

You need to baby proof your home. After plastic bags were introduced in the 1950s, many human children have suffocated from bags. Throughout the years we have heard horror stories from other breeders and Corgi owners in which their Corgi suffocated from a bag. This happens in minutes.

Corgis are a curious breed, excited to discover new things throughout their lives whether a puppy or an old Corgi they will be exploring anything and everything. And well, when it comes to a new smell of a treat, food, and/or even a small crumb, their nose is in it.

Plastic bags are loaded guns. It's a major concept, hard to acquire, and you must always watch visitors, who don't know food bags are killers.

You have to train EVERYBODY. Cut holes in food bags before tossing in the trash. We have had to form this as a daily habit. We actually even look into the trash frequently to be sure there are no bags just sitting in there. Food waste goes in only ONE place, and that's locked-up. We have scissors hanging on cup hooks by the sink.

Venetian blinds also are known to kill dogs and children. Talk about this to every dog owner you meet. You'll never know how many you save.

Corgis love to eat, and many are big "gulpers". Don't loose your Corgi to a choking accident, by feeding something too big, and/or too much of.

Cut bottoms off bags. Don't even keep dog-food bags.
